

Tieast Leverett-Thornton is a mother to three incredible kids, a wife to her soul-mate and the National Product Training manager at a major automotive manufacturer.

In the past, she has traveled the globe as an international flight attendant for United Airlines while working as a contract trainer/facilitator/speaker for several Fortune 500 companies and government contractors. She also developed and delivered sales training for real estate organizations in Ghana, West Africa while operating her own corporate training business.

In addition to speaking in front of professional audiences, Tieast is committed to serving the community, and has served as a contributing member as well as on the board of several non-profit organizations. She is particularly committed to helping women overcome adversity and realizing the potential they have within.

Every free moment she has between family and work, she spends in her creative “happy place”, making clothing, crafts and jewelry while working on her startup label...MULESHYNE.

The name MULESHYNE pays homage to her great-grandfather’s mule, which he lovingly called “Shine.”

She loves to create unique pieces using recycled materials and African fabrics, and fully subscribes to the belief that creativity is both productive and therapeutic.
